LEAGUE PARK FIRE.

League Park, was the first to see the fire. After an ineffectual attempt on his part and that of Head Watchman Rife to extinguish the flames, he called to B. S. Muckenfuse, assistant bookkeeper at the ball park. He ran to the alarm box at the front gate of the park and turned in the first alarm. This was followed shortly by a second and third alarm, which were turned in by Ben Swingley, secretary of the Fire Department. Twenty engines went to the scene, but only ten of these were of service, since others could not get to the fire before it was practically over. From the first it was seen that the grand stand and pavilions were doomed, and efforts were directed to saving the property of the St. Louis Fair Association and the bleachers. This was done successfully.

OWNERS PRESENT WHEN FIRE STARTED.

Frank de Haas Robinson, M. S. Robinson and E. C. Becker, who are the stockholders in the St. Louis Baseball Club, place their losses yesterday close to $40,000. They said that they could not definitely state the amount of insurance, but that it approximates $10,000. They believe that records and other valuable papers belonging to the club are safe in the vault which was in their offices. In this is also the money taken in yesterday, and if the safe withstood the fire much is saved to the owners of the local team.

All the above gentlemen were in the grand stand when the fire commenced. Frank de Haas Robinson, as soon as he heard the cry of fire, ran to the top of the stand and ordered the police of the park to man the hand grenades, of which there were many in different sections of the structure. This was done, and the grenades proved useless, as many were rusted and choked with dirt. He then waited until the greater part of the crowd had left the stand, and made his way to the extreme northern box and jumped to the ground. At the time the flames were burning fiercely, and a moment later the roof over the southern end of the stand caved in.

WIRE SCREEN HINDERS ESCAPE.

The screen which is intended to protect occupants of the grand stand from foul flies caused no little inconvenience, and might have caused loss of life. This screen is directly back of the catcher's position and extends to the right and to the left. Those in the central part of the stand, in surging downward by the screen, were hindered in trying to break through this obstacle. It retarded their efforts, and persons who attempted to escape here were forced to turn to the right or left and make their way to a place where this screen did not intervene between them and safety. Frank Wyman and several other members of the baseball club were among those thus inconvenienced, and because of the delay escaped from the burning building at the last moment.

The St. Louis Transit Company will lose several hundred dollars as the result of the fire. The heat melted the wires both along the Natural Bridge road and at the loop of the Vandeventer line at the Natural Bridge road. The fire at this loop, and also the small station at the place were partially burned. John Grant, a Transit Company employee, in the grand stand when the fire commenced. He made his way down

FIRE DESTROYS ST. LOUIS'S OPPORTUNITY OF WINNING.

St. Louis stood an excellent chance of winning the game from Cincinnati when the fire broke out in the grand stand. The score had been tied with one run by the Reds in the ninth inning. In the last half of the ninth St. Louis failed to improve the score, and the extra inning resulted in a one, two, three retirement for the visitors.

Wallace, who had batted like a fend all through the game, stepped to the batter's box in St. Louis's half of the tenth and hit a pretty single, which augured success for St. Louis. Childs stepped up after Wallace, and as he has been making some very timely hits, the game seemed to be a certain victory for Donovan's team. Childs was at bat and Pitcher Newton was showing signs of nervousness when suddenly the cry of fire rang out from many throats and immediately the game had to be stopped.

OCCUPANTS OF GRAND STAND HAVE EXCITING EXPERIENCES.

In the progress of the fire and the efforts of everybody to reach places of safety many St. Louisans had experiences that were decidedly out of the ordinary, even for a fire. Several ladies who had been to the game and Mrs. R. D. Walsh of No. 423 Elm boulevard, was present to witness for the first time a professional game of baseball. He attended the game in company with his wife, Taylor of 428 Raymond avenue, and when the cry of fire arose was seated in the grand stand, quite near the press box. Mr. Taylor grabbed him and joined the stampede to the stairs. When he saw that there was no chance of escape, he turned and ran toward the open field. He was shaken up, and beyond being shaken up, was uninjured.

Several ladies who had witnessed this concluded that it was the safest and most expedient method of escaping from the flames, which were now rapidly spreading. Urged on and aided by their escorts, they gathered up the stairs, mounted the railing and jumped. The gentlemen below, who had caught young Walsh, caught each of them in turn, until all were safely landed. Then, amid blisses, apologies, hurried thanks and little screams of terror, the women scurried away to the open field.

GROUND KEEPER RESCUES WOMEN.

A prominent society woman fainted on the burning grand stand and was rescued by William Corcoran, keeper of the League Park grounds. Corcoran was sitting only twenty feet from where the fire started, and with those about him thought at first that the disturbance was occasioned only by a fight. Learning of the fire he ran forward and jumped into the field. Hardly had he regained his feet after falling to the ground when he was attracted by the cry of a woman behind him, who begged for help. She was a stylishly dressed and accompanied by a younger woman. Corcoran started toward her, but the woman jumped to the ground. As she did so her companion fainted. Exhausted by the fire, Corcoran climbed into the stand and carried the younger woman, who proved to be the daughter of the other, to the field and then assisted her to a drug store. He refused to divulge their names.

ESCAPED FROM THE PRESIDENT'S BOX.

Mr. Charles Ware, a director of the Buxton & Skinner Stationery Company, and Mrs. Ware, were in the president's box with Mr. William Compton, a banker of Lincoln, Mo., and Mrs. Compton. One of the gentlemen jumped to the ground, seven feet below the box, and caught the ladies, who were assisted from the stand by the other man.

WOMEN COMPELLED TO CLIMB OVER RAILING.

Prominent business men and society ladies were overpowered by the flames and compelled to climb over the railing to the field below. Some jumped over the front railing, but the majority merely fell. Men took their wives in their arms and clambered down the stairs as best they could, and many jumped down

SECOND DISASTER OF ITS KIND.

Yesterday's disaster marks the second time within three years that fire has destroyed the grand stand at the baseball park. On April 15, 1898, when the inclosure was known as Sportsman's Park and was under the management of Chris Von der Ahe, in the course of the second game of the season, the grand stand became ignited in the same unexplained manner as yesterday, supposedly from a match or lighted cigar stump thrown aside by a careless smoker. The grand stand, pavilions and all the bleachers were destroyed, the loss reaching $30,000. At that time temporary seats were erected over night and play was resumed on the grounds the next day.

and a handkerchief ran out a cold wave for his help. He was unable to let a policeman come to his rescue and caught hold of the doctor's legs. The weather prophet was inconsolable for his failure to predict the hot wave and the Fire Department arrived. "Didn't I tell you that there would be a hot wave?" he said.

SALVATION ARMY GUILD HELD TO HER WAR CRIES.

Devotion to duty was exhibited by a Salvation Army girl, who came into the grand stand to sell War Cries. She was in the middle of the stand, not more than fifty feet from where the fire broke out. She would not get out of the stand until she had sold the last of her goods. She was at the first cry of fire, but was swept with the crowd to the front, where the others were leaping wildly over the rail to the ground. Some one in brushing past her knocked the bundle of War Cries from under the Salvationist's arm. She clung to the rail rather than go to safety without the papers for selling which she herself would get not one cent of commission. When the worst of the rush was past she gathered together her papers, marked and soiled as they were, and then with the assistance of a policeman reached the ground in safety. As soon as she lit herself, beyond reach of the flames she began again to hawk her War Cries and sold every one to the crowd who had witnessed her bravery.

EMERGENCY DRYER HAS CLOSE CALL.

One of the narrowest escapes of the fire was that of an emergency dryer. The official called the game when assured that the fire was a certainty and not a false alarm. He then rushed to the front of the stand and climbed into it, though crowded with hundreds of people. He was going the other way. Dryer made his way to the top of the burning frame and insisted upon going to the office. He was told to look out for himself. He was beyond reach of the flames and began again to hawk her War Cries and sold every one to the crowd who had witnessed her bravery.

MISSOURI STOCKMAN NEARLY PERISHES.

John Forrest, a stock dealer from Balline, Mo., narrowly escaped being burned to death. He was seated in the rear of the grand stand and had removed his heavy boots to rest his feet. When the fire broke out he was unable to get out of the stand. He remembered his boots. He attempted to return, but was knocked down and stepped over several people before he could rise. Luckily he had been in the rear of the stand and was soon left alone. He grabbed up his boots in one hand and then followed to the front, where he was assisted to the ground.

ATHLETIC YOUNG MAN SAVES CRIPPLED BOY.

The saving of Mr. Frank Wyman's crippled son, Allen, was one of the most dramatic incidents of the fire. With his father the boy occupied one of the front boxes. When the fire struck panic into the crowd they rushed forward over seats and boxes, sweeping every one over the railing into the grounds below. In this panic the boy, who was unable to care for himself, was nearly trampled on. A young man of athletic frame came to the father's assistance. The young man braced himself against the railing and the boy was saved. The father was unable to get out of the stand. The young man, who was a member of the team, was the only one who was able to get out of the stand. He was the only one who was able to get out of the stand. He was the only one who was able to get out of the stand.

When a baby's life can be saved by food it is worth while knowing something of that food.

When a baby's life can be saved by food it is worth while knowing something of that food. A minister's wife, named given below, writes: "I do not exaggerate in the least when I say that I have never yet seen a picture of the starving babies of India that looked as bad as our baby did. The skin was drawn tightly as possible over her little frame, and was almost black. Her little form was so shrunken that it was pitiable to look at. Her little eyes only showed that she was alive."

MR. HELLBRODER LOSES VALUABLE RECORDS.

Myers, Muckenfuse and Hellbroder were in the office at the time of the outbreak of the fire. They grabbed up the money in the drawer and hurriedly placed it in the safe and were about to leave the office when they remembered the books. These they began to store away in the safe also when they were compelled to desist by flames which whirled into the office soon after starting. Mr. Muckenfuse slammed the door of the safe at the last moment and escaped, but Mr. Hellbroder had still some books which he could not part with. He grabbed up as many of these as possible and dashed from the grand stand, leaving, however, $40 behind him and some records which he has been compiling for years, and which cannot be replaced.

LIGHTNING STARTS BIG FIRE IN DALLAS.

Carriage and Implement Warehouse Filled With Stock Totally Destroyed.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.

Dallas, Tex., May 4.—At 8:30 to-night, during a terrific thunderstorm, with intense electrical features, lightning struck the new six-story block owned by the Southern Rock Island Pile Company.

The building was a fire-proof warehouse, but in less than an hour it was a total loss. It was filled with wagons, buggies and agricultural machinery. The value of the stock is estimated at from $30,000 to $40,000, and the building at approximately $100,000. It was erected less than a year ago and covered most of the square bounded by Elm, Houston and Broadway streets and Pacific avenue. The insurance is unofficially estimated at a quarter of a million dollars.

THE E. O. Starnard Mills were slightly damaged and at one time were almost given up.

D. H. Lindsay's marble works also burned; loss $10,000.

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas and the Texas and Pacific Railroad companies lost several thousand dollars of loaded cars that stood on side tracks.

Chief of the Fire Department, H. F. McGraw, was seriously injured by being struck on the head by falling bricks. A driver for Wells Fargo Express Company named Cox, while trying to save his team and wagon, was run into by a bunch of cars being pulled from the fire and was so badly injured that amputation of a leg is considered necessary.
